Erik H. Erikson, a psychoplogo and American psychoanalyst born in Germany, theories about the sequence of human development that had an impact on clinical psychoanthalysis, ethics, history, literature, child care, and the emerging interdisciplinary study of the course of Developed life. Erikson was a student of art, but after submitted to psychoanis by Anna Freud in Vienna in 1927 he turned to the field of psychology. According to Erikson's life cycle theory, first published in infancy and society (1950), eight developmental stages, which are biologically determined, but in the form environmentally: the infancy First infancy, age game, school age, adolescence, adulthood, mature adulthood and old age. Each of these steps is associated with a specific crisis that the individual must solve with only one, in order to proceed normally to the next phase, for example, the identity against confusion in adolescence. The concept of the identity crisis is now firmly incorporated into the psychiatric theory. Erikson also studied the relationship between a person's life and the times when he or she lives; And his historic-biographic studies of Luther and Gandhi are highlighted products of this beginning.
